LINK TO STRATEGIC BLUEPRINT: INFORMED, ENGAGED, AND EMPOWERED STAKEHOLDERS

Javan Allison was born in 2008 as a premature baby with several complications. As an infant he was diagnosed with a heart murmur and Bronchitis; which later became asthma. Between the ages of 1 and 8, Javan had to overcome over 9 surgeries which included tubes in his ears from a loss of hearing, his adenoids removed from lack of breathing in his sleep, and more. Since then, Javan has been in and out of the hospital and on more than one occasion admitted to ICU. Due to his medical complications Javan was once delayed with his speech and motor skills, which affected him in his education.

Today he suffers from severe asthma, ADHD, and anxiety. His last asthma attack was a near death experience. After defeating the odds, he decided to open up and let the world in by describing how he feels through his writing. Javan's experience with writing developed through spending his summers in a writing camp with the "Page Slayers." It motivated him to pursue writing. With the help of his mom, Monique Cooper, and "Tyla'Grace Publishing", Javan co-wrote his first children's book from his 3 book series on his disabilities. #AsthmaSucks is the first book in the series. Javan describes how he feels and ways to prevent severe attacks all through imaginary adventures. The next two books soon to be released, will focus on the topics of ADHD and anxiety. Through these books, Javan is bringing awareness to parents who may not know how detrimental this illness can be. His goal is to help children understand their disabilities, so they can better communicate how they are feeling. He also wants to help parents in understanding these disabilities from a child's perspective.
